An associate degree can still get you far in business, particularly when you've got the ambition and tenacity of Tania Srouji. Simply put, she wears multiple hats. As an IT recruiter with JFC Staffing, she helps to match qualified job seekers in the growing IT industry with employers looking for just the right person. Her professional history in sales, marketing and consulting — coupled with a previous stint as an IT installer and trainer — make her uniquely qualified in her current recruiting role.

When Srouji isn't recruiting, she's selling: She and her sister co-own Eye Candy, an accessories company they started in 2008 as a labor of love, which has grown to be a thriving business. The sisters were even profiled in the Central Penn Business Journal's 2010 edition of Movers & Shakers. Like many with her kind of self-made success, Srouji believes in giving back to the community. She is president of the American Business Women's Association, Camelot Chapter, and was also named the chapter's 2011 Woman of the Year.

What actress would play you in a movie about your life? Liz Taylor would play me because she has a love for jewelry and accessories like I do. The movie would be called "Diamonds on the Soles of Her Shoes" (like the Paul Simon song).
